

DATE FOR POWER BEFORE SENATORS

Burkett and Brown in Fight for Nebraska
Leadership.
Feud Cuts Off Friendship
Cemented in Reform
Campaign.

There has suddenly developed, over a patronage difference, a feud between the two Senators from Nebraska which is liable to have a most important relation to future political developments in that State, as well as to the political fortunes of the two Senators.

It seems that in the minds of Senators and others who have been watching the development of the feud there is some uncertainty whether the twain of Nebraska have cut the last cable binding them together. It is reported that the two have passed with somewhat ostentatious air of not being able to recognize one another. Just now they are preparing to measure strength with the White House in order to decide who is going to be boss.

There is an impression that Senator Burkett has the advantage in pull at the White House, but that his colleague will turn up with the stronger backing in the home State. Altogether the situation is complicated most remarkably.

Involves Important Issues.

It involves Presidential politics and the tendencies of the delegation from Nebraska to the Republican national convention; the future of Senator Burkett, who is now a candidate for reelection, is directly concerned; and, finally, the general question of whether the "new idea" in politics shall continue to prevail in Nebraska, or whether the State shall return to the frank and avowed rule of the railroad politicians who so long controlled it, is likely to be raised.

Burkett and Brown are an interesting pair of young reformers. Burkett came to the Senate as the first Senatorial fruits of the long fight against domination of his State by the combination of Union Pacific and Burlington railroad interests.

There was about a decade during which, following the pretty definite repudiation of the "boss" rule, the corporations held undisputed sway. Their control became so rank that in time the Republicans revolted and the railroads were defeated. Burkett came to the Senate, and Brown was made attorney general of the State. He carried on a long and remarkable fight against the railroads, forcing them to pay up an immense amount of back taxes. For reward he was elected to the Senate.

Worked for Each Other.

He and Burkett had been intimate friends; Brown supported Burkett for the Senate, and in turn Burkett supported Brown. They are both good politicians, and it seemed as if, in combination, they would be strong enough to hold things down for an indefinite time at home.

Senator Brown took his seat only a few weeks ago, at the opening of this session. Soon afterward there was rumor of difference concerning the question of making up the Nebraska delegation to the Republican national convention.

It was said in Nebraska circles that there was considerable talk of Senator Burkett going as delegate-at-large, and that Burkett was disposed, by way of avoiding an unnecessary contest, to give up the nomination to a delegate, but he wanted it understood, if he did so, that other officeholders of the first class should likewise be left off the delegation so that there should be no invidious distinctions.

Senator Brown was not disposed to agree to this according to the story. He wanted to be a delegate at large, and was confident he could be elected without trouble.

Parting of the Ways.

Just how much weight this disagreement may have had is only to be conjectured. The split came over the selection of an in-house collector for Nebraska. Burkett was committed to Ross Hammond, of Fremont, who was perhaps the foremost supporter of Burkett for the Senate; Brown was determined to have W. B. Rose, of Lincoln, who was chairman of the State committee for the campaign, and who Brown was chosen Senator. Neither would yield and the appointment was hung up.

While their friends fully expected that the Senators would reach an amicable agreement about the appointment, Senator Brown ended possibility of compromise by going alone, to the White House and submitting his indorsement for Rose. The move was unexpected by his colleagues. Two days later Mr. Burkett went up and submitted his indorsement of Hammond. The fight was on, with the President as umpire, the alternative partnership of Burkett and Brown split, a Presidential delegation involved, and the possibility of compromise ended.

Keifer Earns
His $21 a Day
Walking About

Gen. J. Warren Keifer, of Ohio, is convinced that he fully earns the $21 per day that is paid him for lifting his mighty voice on the floor of the House and bestowing his large bulk in his chair. He weighs much.

The Democrats kept trying to amend the pending bill for the removal of the penal statutes and, at almost every attempt, they called for tellers, who necessitated every member walking from his seat and passing between the tellers on the way to the main aisle of the House.

After many trips of this sort, Keifer leaver over to the Democrats, of Pennsylvania, with the remark:

"I have been in doubt as to whether I was earning my $21 a day, but this business of walking ten miles a day in these reassures me. I'm earning it all right."

THE QUEEN'S COUNSEL.

During the first jubilee of the late Queen a distinguished American was shown round the courts and heard a C. C. address the court. "I won't say who it was," said Lord Alington, "but it was the bar then." After about twenty minutes the visitor said: "Is that one of her majesty's counsels?" "Yes," replied the answer, "I've God save the Queen!"—Pull Mail Gazette.
